DID SHE KILL THE CHILD?

NATHAN OF JERSEY CITY. Trying to Poison Herself and her Son Rather than be Separated from Him - Queer Contradictions-Poison to be Looked for At 9 o'clock yesterday morning a young woman entered Police Headquarters in Jersey City, and, addressing Inspector Morrison, who was on duty, inquired for Chief Nathan. She wore a brown cashmere dress, handsomely trimmed with velvet and lace, and wore a jockey hat. On being directed to the Chief's office she rapped at the door without showing any nervousness and when the Chief opened the door she quietly asked, "Are you the Chief of

"Yes, madam," he replied, and, inviting her into the room, offered her a chair. She sighed as she sat down. Then she mouned painfully, and said:

"I have come to give myself up." "Upon what charge?" interrogated the Chief.
"I have murdered my child!" answered the Having said this, she began to cry piteously, and between her sobs frequently repeated the words, "My baby, my baby, my little Richard!" Chief Nathan inferred from her conduct that she was either under the influence of liquor or demented, and he therefore questioned her

"Have you been drinking?" he asked. " No. sir."

"Are you subject to aberrations of mind?" "I am perfectly rational, sir," she replied, rather angrily.

The proceed of Miss. Fanness of Commerce of the Second Sec

Since the interment Mary's husband has been prevented by his parents from holding any communication with her. Tormented incessantly by her conscience for the crime she had committed and upbraided by the Phillips tamily for off-ences of which she was innocent, she was unable to ent or sleep, and became the prey of the most terrible apprehensions and of remorse. She became convinced that the only way to recover her peace of mind was to make atonement for the wrong she had done, and concluded to deliver herself into the hands of the police to be dealt with by law.

After listening patiently to this narrative, Chief Nathan said that hers was a very deplorable case.

After listening patiently to this narrative. Chief Nathan said that hers was a very deplorable case.

"But do you think I shall be hanged?" she eagerly inquired.

He gave her an evasive answer, and then imprisoned her in a cell to await examination. A messenger was immediately sent for Justice Peloubet to headquarters. On arriving there the magistrate was closeted with the woman for some time, and the story which she related to him was so inconsistent and contradictory that the suspicions of her insanity that had been originally entertained were strengthened. At the formal examination at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the First District Police Court, the proceedings were begun with the reading of a certificate signed by County Physician Converse, who had examined the prisoner, and in which he said that he had failed to discover any evidence that would justify him in pronouncing her insane. On being arraigned, Mary declared that she administered poison on Wednesday, Sept. 4, at 15, P. M., to her boy Richard. It was laudanum, and she gave him one-half teaspoonful because she thought it would do him good. When she saw he did not awake, she took the rest herself, because she did not want to be separated from him. She did not give it to the child for the purpose of killing him, but because she thought he acted as if he was crazy.

At the conclusion of her story Justice Peloubet remanded her to await the action of Coroner Gamon, by whom she was subsequently committed to the county jail on a charge of murder, subject to the result of the inquest. The bedy of the child was disinterred by direction of the Coroner, and removed to Brady's morgue, where a post-mortem examination is to be made to-day.

The elder Mrs. Phillips, on being informed that her daughter-in-law had surrendered herself to the police for the murder of her baby, appeared to be very much astonished. She indignantly denied that any discord had ever existed in the family on a account of Mary, and said that the child had always been a great favorite.

We all loved her," she added, "beyond measure."

When Mrs. Phillips and her husband were brought to Headquarters by Detective Birdsall and questioned by the Chief and the Coroner, they asserted that the child had been taken sick on Wednesday afternoon. Dr. Callaghan was sent for, and after examining the little sufferer inquired whether anything had been administered to him. His mother answered. "Nothing." When asked his opinion of the case the physician answered that it was not wise to speak too much, and went away soon afterwards, Mrs. Phillips, the elder, remarked that if the child should die suddenly she would like to have a post-mortem examination made. Her daughter-in-law, hearing her words, quietly said: "You needn't be to that trouble, for I poisoned him myself."

"Why did you not tell the doctor that?" asked her mother-in-law.
"Because I didn't want to," Mary sullenly rejoined. The elder Mrs. Phillips then carried the baby to Dr. Kopetchny, but did not mention to him the revelation made by its Bother, an omission which she explained by declaring that she did not believe it.

ANTHONY'S PLOT REVEALED.

Not Murdered, but Alive and Well in Topeka -His Friend's Story.

Superintendent Walling received official notification from Capt. Aliaire yesterday that the mystery surrounding the disappearance of the young lawyer. Barent De Clyne Anthony, had been solved. Capt. Allaire has never believed in the theories of murder, and he has been very much exercised over the pub-licity that the case attained, and the Impression that prevailed that such a crime had been committed in his precinct. He has worked indefatigably on the case, and he said yesterday that he had traced it out. "I can prove that young Anthony is alive and well," he continued. "He is in Topeka, Kansas, and his departure was surrounded with mystery for ensational effect. It was a heartless put up job. His family and friends know where he is, and some of them knew of it all the time. Some of his relatives knew of his whereabouts while they were calling regularly at the station with inquiries after his body and the result of the dredging operations in the river. The the dredging operations in the river. The great distress of manner was all simulated and yet they allowed the public to believe that a murder had been committed, and they permitted the young woman, Miss Butter, to believe that her lover had been killed until her sorrow almost crazed her. I never heard of a meaner case."

The Captain has found a young friend of Anthony who assisted Anthony in going away. His name is not disclosed because his participation in it if known would cost him his position. The friend gives a graphic account of the plot and its execution. It originated with Anthony. The motive was a desire to avoid marrying Miss Butler, to whom he was engaged, the day having been set after three years of courtship and the usual number of quarries and reconciliations. The friend tried to dissuade Anthony from his purpose, but he was determined; and the plan that filled his brain was that his whereabouts should not be known by his friends for several years. Then he expected to return rich and famous and to astonish those who believed that he was dead. He seemed to care somewhat for his promised bride, but thought that he could not afford to marry. His friends describe the piot as follows:

seemed to care somewhat for his promised bride, but thought that he could not afford to marry. His friends describe the piot as follows:

"On Thursday, the 29th uit, at 4 P. M. Anthony and I went to the railroad teket office at Broadway and Park place. He bought a ticket office at Broadway and Park place. He bought a soft felt hat. In the evening he bid Millie good-by, and then we went to Thirteenth avenue and Twenty-fifth street, near the high fence around the coal yard. It was midnight. He took off his white Derby hat and throwing it on the ground put on the slouch hat. Then be took some papers out of a Russia leather memorandum book, and, opening the book, laid it on the ground in such a way that it would look as though it had fallen in a struggle. His cane was thrown down near by. He was very much pleased with the way the things looked and chuckled, as he said: 'Now for a sensation. Be sure and send me the papers. They will be interesting. Keep mum and they will have me robbed and murdered and thrown into the river. I'll skip out, and in a fow years I will come back rich, and I will make you a prine."

"Then he laughed again at the 'sell' and talked on in the same strain. Once he said: 'I am sorry for poor Mille, but she will get over it. All girls do.' Then we went away, and he left town next day."

Anthony wrote from Topeka to his friend a closely-written four-page letter. It was shown to the Captain. After giving his views of life in Kansas, which are not rose-colored, Anthony reverts to the subject of his plot and asks his friend to keep his secret well, saving that he had bought a pistol and loaded it before leaving New York, and that he will blow his brains out if he is exposed.

street. One was considerably older than the other, and was grayhaired. Their clothes were stained and travel-worn. In a few minutes they came out, and taunted Soully with vile language. Then the liquor dealer ran out and tromptly knecked the younger one of the men down. The clder of the two threw off his coat and het and hurried up to punish Soully, but was in turn knocked down by that agile young Irishman. The men lay within a few feet of each other, and as fast as one attempted to rise Soully would knock him down. In this way he spent about fifteen minutes, visiting first one and then the other, until, as he says, he "legan to rather enjoy it." Finally, the men showed no more fight, but lay still and yelled "murder!"

Then Fitzgerald, who had continued sitting on his steps during the fighting, said to his wife: "It's too bad for those boys to be lying there. One is a friend of mine, I think. At any reate, I'll help them to get home." So he found the old man's coat and hat, put them on him, and, with his arm around him, almost dragged him across the street in front of his own dwelling.

"Do you know that ——who struck me?"

"No, you'll have to find out;" and he turned to ask where the old man lived.

"There, take that!" said the man behind him, slashing a razer across Fitzgerald's neck.

"He's broke my neck with a billy," said Fitzgerald, falling against his fonce. Mrs. Fitzgerald ran to him and put her hand over the wound, but the blood spirted out between her fingers, Physician Stone came past in time to prevent Scully says that both men entered his barroom together and called for two glasses of beer. While he was getting it he remonstrated with them for their bad language. Upon their insulting him he turned them out of doors without giving them the beer. After the razor cutting both strangers disappeaged. On Thursday morning Constable Samuel Freeman found the younger one sleeping under some bushes in the coal yard of the Central Railroad of New Jersey. Taken before Fitzgerald, he was identified as the one who cut him. Scully, also recognized him. Before Justice John F.

Hunter in the Bay Hill Hotel, South Amboy, he said that his name was William Stevenson.
In his pocket was found a heavy razor which Dr. Strong said would have made the cut in Why Prof. Albrecht, a Jersey Church Organ-Prof. T. Albrecht has for the past two years been organist of the German Evangelical Church in Hoboken. Being an excellent musician, a man of prepossessing appearance and affable address, he succeeded in securing a large number of pupils, to whom he gave priaffable address, he succeeded in securing a large number of pupils, to whom he gave private instructions. The Rev. Mr. Mohn, the paster, had him engaged to give lessons on the piano to his (the paster's) niceo, a benatiful girl of 14 years. On last Tuesday evening, while Albrecht and Miss Mohn were in the parlor together, he, it is alleged, fell on his knees and assured the girl of his affection for her and vowed eternal fidelity. Then he put his arms around her and kissed her. Miss Mohn, knowing Albrecht was a married man, ordered him to quit the house instantly. He went away assuring her of his honerable intentions.

She related what had happened to a relative, who repeated it to her father, Mr. William Mohn, brother of the paster. Charges of unchristian conduct were immediately preferred against Albrecht, and the Consistory of the Church assembled on Wednesday evening to try the accused man. On entering the room the Professor advanced to the girl's father and attempted to shake hands with him.

"You internal secondrel, how dare you tender me greeting!" Indignantly exclained Mr. Mohn, and springing upon Albrecht, he struck him violently. The church members present interfered, and the trual was terminated with the dismissal of Mr. Albrecht, who admitted that he had done it to encourage her in her musical studies.

MORE MYSTERY IN THE MURDER CASE OF MARY STANNARD.

What the Rev. Mr. Hayden Relies upon to Establish his Innocence—Rumors Implient-ing the Girl's Father—A Justice's Dilemma. MADISON, Conn., Sept. 7 .- The mystery that surrounds the murder of Mary E. Stannard grows more and more dense. The clergyman, the Rev. H. H. Hayden, who has been arrested, accused of the crime, is silent, but his friends already tell the story that he relies upon to clear him in the preliminary examination that is to be held on Monday. At the same time there begins to spread a rumor that in clearing the minister the girl's father will be implicated.

After the Coroner's inquest, which was held on Thursday, there appeared on record evidence that, taken with subsequent information, led to the arrest of the Rev. Mr. Hayden. The proof was so positive that the jury rendered verdict of murder without a minute's discusmony on Thursday evening. He saw that the motives for the murder of this inoffensive girl must have been one of two-either lust or the desire to conceal a crime, and there was the most positive proof that the former was not the motive. The post-mortem examination and the disposition of the clothing showed that, If the testimony of Mary's father and sister and of Mrs. Studley, with whom Mary lived, and to whom she first told her secret sorrow, was true, the motive for her murder was clear, but it involved the village clergyman—a man who stood well in the community, and who was rigorous in his manner of life. The Justice hesitated to act. Then the Grand Juror went to Justice Wilcox of South Madison, the main vitlage, about seven miles from Rockland, and put the story to him as follows:

He said Mary E. Stannard was found on Tuesday alternoon by her father in the woods, with the life veins of her neck cut, her skull beaten in, and her face bruised; the Coroner's Throaday and Park pick use. At 19 M. Anthony and I went to the railread ticket offes at Broadway and Park place. He bought a taket for Topeka, Kansas. Then he bought a soft felt fait. In the evening he bid Milité good-by, and then we went to Thirteouth acone and Twenty-fifth street, near the high good-by, and then we went to Thirteouth acone and Twenty-fifth street, near the high good-by, and then we went to Thirteouth acone and Twenty-fifth street, near the high fence night. He took off his white Derly hat and throwing it on the ground put on the slouch hat. Then he took some papers out of a fluss hi leader memorandum book, and, coming the book, laid it on the ground in such a fallen in a struggle. His cane was thrown down near by. He was very much pleased with the way the things leaked and chuckled, as he said: Now for a sense, will be interesting. Keep mum are the result have me robbed and murder-d and thrown into the river. I'll skip out, and in a few years will be interesting. Keep mum are fallen in the same strain. Once he said: "Then he laughed again at the 'sell' and talked on in the same strain. Once he said: "The he laughed again at the 'sell' and talked on in the same strain. Once he said: "The he laughed again at the 'sell' and talked on in the same strain. Once he said: "The heart of the said and talked on the same strain. Once he true he knew she had good reason for thinking so.

But with this defence of the minister, there comes the question, if he did not do it who did? It is said to-night, if the minister is discharged on Monday, that the father will be arrosted as the murderer, for there have arisen rumors of a quarrel that he had with her on Monday, and it is said that he tells many different stories of his whereabouts on Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. Hayden's pulpit will be occupied by a stranger to-morrow, and the accused minister can sit by the front window of his keeper's house and see his congregation pass by. His young wife must stay at her lonely home, ten miles away, for she has three children, one a babe of a few days, to care for; but she sends loving messages to him, and bids him not lose heart. Justice Wilcox went over the locality of the murder to-day, that he might be better prepared for the testimony on Monday.
